The Uplake Update

Summer 2022

A bit of history - by Linda Ottomar

Did you know that Bothell Way is over 100 years old? Prior to about 1913 there was a rutted wagon road between Seattle and Bothell going right past Uplake. The main transportation method in the area was by steamer on the lake or via the railroad on today's Burke Gilman Trail. In 1913 a brick paved road was built from Bothell, going past Lake Forest Park and then into Seattle following present-day Lake City Way. Near what is now Nathan Hale High School the road turned southwest toward the University District. After the bricks proved too slippery when wet it was covered with concrete and asphalt. In Bothell it later connected with the Bothell Everett Highway. This was the main route north until Highway 99 was built in the 1930's and I-5 in the 1960s.

You can still see part of the brick road near the clubhouse for the defunct Wayne Golf Course. Information for this article came partly from the book, Kenmore by the Lake, written by the late Uplake resident, Priscilla Droge.
